Coca-Cola company tests first paper bottle

Coca-Cola will test a paper bottle to eliminate plastic from its packaging entirely.

5 The objective is to create a 100% recyclable, plastic-free bottle capable of preventing gas escaping from carbonated drinks. This may alter the taste of the drink, but industry giants are backing the plan. Coca-Cola, for example, has set a goal of producing zero waste by 2030.

10 Coca-Cola was ranked the world's number one plastic polluter in 2019, closely followed by other drink-producers like Pepsi and Nestlé. In one year, it uses around three million tons of plastic packaging. Plastic has harmful effects on our environment. It is polluting rivers and oceans, and harming and killing wildlife. Plastic is a growing problem because it takes hundreds of years to break down.

15 In order to replace plastic with paper, Coca-Cola has teamed up with a Danish start-up called the Paper Bottle Company ("Paboco" for short). Part of the challenge has been to create a structure capable of withstanding the forces exerted by fizzy drinks - such as cola and beer - which are bottled under pressure.

On top of that, the paper needs to be moldable, to create distinct bottle shapes and sizes for different brands, and take ink for printing the labels.

20 After more than seven years of laboratory work, the firm is now ready to test the first paper bottle in Hungary this summer with Coca-Cola's fruit drink Adez. Initially, this will involve 2,000 bottles distributed locally inside the country. The company wants to examine the package's practicality and customer response to the product before introducing it to the rest of the world.

"With a clever combination of product design and the strong fibre blend, that's what makes it really possible to not break under pressure," said Michael Michelsen, the firm's commercial manager. "We have a good understanding already of what will happen to the bottle in the real world. But we still need real world feedback."
